PITTSBURG, Sept. 13.—"Ted' Coy, last year's rules."

A parade of automobiles filled with excited printers left the Ebbitt yesterday afternoon, and with a band playing adding color to the gayety, the ten teams, which are to participate in the third annual tournament of the Union Printers' National League, drew into National Park.

The teams speedily got on the field. There were those who wished to practice scattered over the field, and the sight presented to the 2,000 fans was one not usually witnessed at a baseball to the same to men who have never played on the variety. Philadelphia took the field, and it was seen at the outset that Columbia 191 was up against it. The Quaker infield worked like clockwork, and shot the ball across the diamond with the precision and grace that characterizes the skill of the Athletics' work. It looked as though the Washington team would be scooped up and carried off, but subsequent events showed that they were made of finer staff.

At any rate, Columbia 191 got the best of Philadelphia No. 2 by 9 to 6. Philadelphia No. 2 by 9 to 6. Manager Clarke evidently placed too much dependence to young twirlers. He figured that Adams would do even better than last season and that Powell and Moore would win a lot of games, while Camnitz was counted upon to do fully as well as in 1966, and Maddox was also relied upon to do good work. Many fans believe that a mistake was nade in allowing Willis to go for cash. They argue that it would have been much better for the team had a trade been effected. If Pittsburg could have secured a man like Harmen or Backman for the elongated heaver, Pirate fans assert that the Pittsburg team would have been better off.

But the big infinite in the color washington could do was to break into the run column with two tallies in the third. But the big infinite in the sixth, with a four-run lead, Philadelphia let comfortably safe until the bombard-ment began.

This inning was what practically defined the game, for the Philadelphia Printers never recovered. Ball, Ellett, Krouse, Willhide, and Suess got their clubs together and whanged Lady all over the lot. Four runs were counted in rapid succession, and the score was tied.

making for New Orleans to pick up Lomaking for New Orleans to pick up Lomax prior to a cruise in the Caribbean sea. Cadogan sees, half a mile astern, a dory, to which they row, and find Jane Todd, unconscious from exposure.
Upon her resuscitation Cadogan explains that he heard cress for help. She replies that she did not call. They sall for Cedar Island, the lighthouse which is tended by Jane's father. They run through a gale, during which Jane rescues both men and sails the schooner safeliv into the harbor, where they are met.

If so, it seemed to be Cochrane's backers. Cadogan shook his head, hopelessly befuddled.

"There's neither head nor tail to the tangle. A mad world, my masters! And since madness seems to be the fashion, I'll tag along with the procession, I guess—especially since I'm in it so deep.
